Group theory studies algebraic structures.

An abelian group is a group in which the commutative law holds.

The identity element is unique in every group.